It Hebridean Sea-Reivers Song cannot be too long before this enchanting musical treasure receives the sympathetic and fitting production it so obviously deserves and is returned to the catalogue in a performance that properly reveals its humble but noble radiance. Although he often attacked the stilted mentality of musical academia and condemned the paralysing examination system upon which it was based, Bantock became Principal of the Birmingham and Midland Institute School of Music in and eight years later accepted, on Elgar's retirement, the appointment of Peyton Professor of Music at Birmingham University, which he held until His friend Elgar, 11 Hebridean Sea-Reivers Song his senior, once called him an 'arch heretic': perhaps more famously, he described him 'as having the most fertile imaginative brain of our time' and in Elgar dedicated the second of his Pomp and Circumstance Marches to GB.

But the fulling women understood; likewise, all who smiled at the quaintness BOOK I. This is a slightly expanded and corrected version of an article, originally written for a local readership, published in the April and May issues of An Canan the monthly arts supplement of the West Highland Free Press.
