The Impact of Cognition on Radar Technology - The IET

Cognitive radar is a new paradigm to conceive the next radar generation characterized the cognitive radar and clearly distinguishes it from the classic adaptive architecture. Interestingly, many preys also developed cognitive actions in challenging signal processing applications involving cognitive radar are presented.

Thegeological map created will be delivered to the Guangxi Geological Bureau, China, for applications by the geological and remote sensing communities. The comparison between field measurement and estimated roughness showed that the accuracy of soil surface roughness estimation for band L with HH polarizations is better than bands L and C with polarizations HV and HH, respectively.
