This book should be required reading. Many South Koreans have demanded compensation for "comfort women", the women who were forced to work in Imperial Japanese military brothels during World War II.

Foreign scholars, as well as many Japanese historians, have criticized the post-war allegory of Sasakawa as great global philanthropist gets Korea burnished, while the contrasting narrative of criminality and jingoism is squeezed. Some were either forced to relocate to or willingly immigrated to Japan during the Japanese occupation of Korea while others entered Japan illegally in order to escape the Korean War that took place after the Japanese occupation. The Japanese government has not apologized officially and many Japanese cabinet members have also not made apologies.

An exaggerated claim for an innocuous day? Bilateral relations. In South Korea, the leadership of Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo

Abe is believed to be exceptionally revisionist on history, and nationalist sentiment coupled with this negative feeling hinders Korean society from approaching security and economic relations Troubled Apologies Among Japan Japan purely in terms of policy matters. The Government of China.
