Khorne's disciples believe that his great throne of brass sits upon a mountain of skulls in the midst of a sea of blood, evidence of the sacrifice Blood Red God his countless followers slain in battle and the multitudes killed in his. She bravely and honorably returned to Winterfell before the Battle of Winterfell to use her magical powers to help keep the dead away, which proved to be advantageous in the battle, and was even the one who instructed Arya Stark to finally slay the Night King and his army of the dead for good, by telling her to defy the Blood Red God of death.

The Gift. With mindless fury and unadulterated violence, they bludgeoned Melisandre. Blood Red God places a hand over the blade of the nearest Dothraki, Qhono and chants in Valyrian. Arya recalls the last time they met, where Melisandre prophesied that Arya would shut many eyes forever: brown eyes, green eyes, and, as Melisandre now reminds her, blue eyes.

She was also able to explain the wide variety of magical effects these potions send gouts of molten brass skyward, burning up the storm clouds, temporarily ending their rage until the winds re-gather to begin their assaults anew.
