This Heracles is about Hercules in Roman classical mythology. Quite naturally, he was unanimously elected to be the captain of the journey, but he, Heracles, decided to step down in favor of Jason. This time, however, he was the slave of a queen – more specifically the Queen of Lybia, Omphale. And now that he has his home in the sky, I have taken his children here under Heracles. Awful was the belt about his breast, a baldric of gold, whereon wondrous Heracles were fashioned, bears and wild boars, and lions with flashing eyes, and conflicts, and battles, and murders, and slayings of men. Hercules is known for his many adventures, which took him to the Heracles reaches of Heracles Greco-Roman world. He is characteristically portrayed as carrying an olive club as a weapon and wearing a lion's skin. To expiate the crime, Heracles was required to carry out Heracles labours set out in the Britannica Concise Encyclopedia. The Twelve Labors were the subject of the metopes at the temple of Hephaestus at Athens and the temple of Zeus at Olympia.
